

Fiction Company

BAND STORY

"Bobby Rodriguez and Joey Valdepena first met, briefly, in New York in the late '90s and they reconnected in LA in 2001 and thus their band, Fiction Company, was born. On their debut EP, Maps and Measures, Valdepena provides vocals and plays guitar, while Bobby plays keyboards and contributes back-up vocals. Their work has previously appeared on the soundtrack to Blood and Chocolate (a cover of Billy Idol's "Flesh for Fantasy") and the Napoleon Dynamite soundtrack ("Design"), Grammy-nominated as Best Compilation Soundtrack Album in 2006. The band's arresting and genuine lyrics are backed by an interesting, multi-textured sound—a result of their extensive, varied influences. While Rodriguez's points of reference are The Mamas and the Papas, The Beatles, NWA and Elton John, Valdepena cites "Weird Al" Yankovic, Damon Albarn, Paul Simon and Belle and Sebastian. Fiction Company is its own unique creation, a true collaboration between two artistic soul mates."
